Good evening,
Wonderful day for Remembrance Sunday, very Autumnal. Late this afternoon, as I traveled along that meandering ribbon of calm, the Bridgewater Canal, to the East of Cliff Lane underpass - just beyond the now derelict wrought iron kissing gate - leading to an ancient right of way and who knows where - a magical place - Narnia or Neverland perhaps. Get real you stupid boy proclaimed the sign attached to an adjacent tree - this land is earmarked for yet more houses. Distraught and close to tears, I sought comfort on Pickerings Bridge - Salvation lay on the horizon, silhouetted by a sinking sun. Fiddlers Ferry power station - Brownfield and timely - adequate for hundreds of homes or an incinerator. I assured myself that those appointed to oversee such proceedings will have at least considered: the latest Government directives, the need for affordable housing, the impact on the environment and local infrastructure and not least, quality of life. Hope springs eternal. God bless your deliberations.
